PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF FLORIDA

OPINION BELOW

The opinion (A1) of the Supreme Court of Florida denying the motion to vacate petitioner's sentence of death is not yet reported.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. Section 1257(3). Petitioner asserts a deprivation of rights secured by the United States Constitution.

The order of the Florida Supreme Court was entered on November 10, 1977, and petition for rehearing was denied on March 9, 1978 (A8).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

This case involves the due process clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments to the United States Constitution.

QUESTION PRESENTED

WHETHER PETITIONER WAS DENIED DUE PROCESS OF LAW, WHERE THE JUDGE WHO SENTENCED HIM TO DEATH WAS AWARE OF PRE-SENTENCE INVESTIGATIVE MATERIAL NOT AVAILABLE TO PETITIONER BUT STATES THAT HE DISREGARDED SAID INFORMATION.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner was convicted of murder and rape in the Circuit Court for Palm Beach County, Florida. The jury recommended that the petitioner be sentenced to death. The trial judge, after considering a pre-sentence investigation report, sentenced petitioner to death.

The judgment and sentence were affirmed by the Florida Supreme Court. Alford v. State, 307 So.2d 433 (Fla. 1975).

On May 6, 1977, following the decision of this Court in Gardner v. Florida, 97 S.Ct. 1197, the Florida Supreme Court entered an order directing the trial judge who imposed the death sentence in this case to file a response with the Florida Supreme Court stating whether he had considered any information unknown to the appellant (A13). The trial court filed a response certifying that he did not consider information unknown to the petitioner (A12).

Petitioner then filed a motion to vacate the death sentence in the Florida Supreme Court alleging that the confidential evaluation from the parole and probation officer of September 17, 1973, demonstrated that some of this confidential information was provided to the trial judge who subsequently determined that he should not consider it (A9-A10). This officer testified that he had discussed on several occasions with the judge, in connection with the sentence to be subsequently imposed, confidential information which was not available to petitioner (A15-A17).

On November 16, 1977, the Florida Supreme Court, in a 4 to 3 decision, denied the motion to vacate (A4). The basis of the court's opinion was that it makes no difference if the trial court is "aware" of confidential information not available to a defendant. So long as the trial court does not "consider" such information, then the requirements of Gardner have been complied with.

There were two dissenting opinions filed. The first dissenting opinion was by Justice Boyd who stated that if the sentencing judge is "made aware" of undisclosed facts, then Gardner requires that these undisclosed facts be presented to petitioner with an opportunity to refute them before the trial court.

Justice Hatchett also dissented. The basis of his dissent was that the trial court can only disregard material if it has been presented to the defendant for examination, and only after defendant has been provided an opportunity to contest the accuracy of the facts. Justices Boyd and Sundberg concurred in that dissenting opinion.

ARGUMENT

The Florida Supreme Court found on page 2 of its opinion (A3) that the judge had been "made aware" of some facts which were not available to the petitioner. The trial court did state that it did not "consider" any information which was unknown to petitioner.

In a 4 to 3 decision, the Florida Supreme Court construed the Gardner case to mean that it is not improper for the judge to be aware of facts which are not available to the defendant, so long as he disregards those facts when imposing sentence.

That opinion (A4) was concurred in by 3 justices in addition to the author of the opinion. The three remaining justices on this 7 man court dissented. They construed Gardner to mean that all material must be presented to the defendant, if the court has been made aware of it, and defendant must be provided an opportunity to test the accuracy of any facts.

The basis of the holding of the majority of the Florida Supreme Court is found in the following paragraph on page 1205 of the Gardner opinion:

> "The State also suggests that full disclosure of the presentence report will unnecessarily delay the proceeding. We think the likelihood of significant delay is overstated because we must presume that reports prepared by professional probation officers, as the Florida procedure requires, are generally reliable. In those cases in which the accuracy of a report is contested, the trial judge can avoid delay by disregarding the disputed material. Or if the disputed matter is of critical importance, the time invested in ascertaining the truth would surely be well spent if it makes the difference between life and death." 97 S.Ct. 1197, 1205 (emphasized material was emphasized by the Florida Supreme Court in its opinion).

The Florida Supreme Court held that due process is followed so long as the sentencing judge "disregards" the confidential information not revealed to the defendant.

The issue in this case thus boils down to what this Court means by "disregarding the disputed material." The dissenting opinion of Justice Hatchett, which was concurred in by the two other dissenting justices, stated:

> "The majority has construed Gardner as recognizing 'the ability of the sentencing judge to disregard material in imposing a sentence.' This construction is based upon the statement that:
> > In those cases in which the accuracy of a report is contested, the trial judge can avoid delay by disregarding the disputed material. Gardner v. Florida, supra, at 1205.
> However, I believe a reading of the entire paragraph from which that quotation is excised, makes it clear that the Court in Gardner meant a trial court can disregard for examination, and only after the defendant has been provided an opportunity to contest the accuracy of any facts. If the contested material is of critical importance, then the trial court may not merely disregard it, but rather must make a full inquiry and resolve the dispute."

We believe the point made by the dissenting justices is confirmed by the use of the term "disputed material" following the term "disregarding".

In the present case the defendant was never made aware of the confidential material and accordingly there was no basis for a dispute at the time the sentencing judge was made aware of it. The only way such material can become disputed is if the defendant knows of it. How can a defendant dispute material when he is not aware of it?

We respectfully suggest that what this Court meant was that the defendant must be given access to the information which is given the sentencing judge. The defendant may then dispute some of the material in this information. The trial judge can, after the defendant has been given the opportunity to point out that material which he "disputes", ignore or disregard the "disputed material" and impose sentence.

The majority opinion of the Florida Supreme Court is not logical because it is not possible for the trial judge to know what material is in dispute, if defendant has not been given an opportunity to point it out. In the present case the record shows, as the opinion of the Florida Supreme Court indicates, that confidential information was revealed to the trial court and not to petitioner. The majority of the Court concluded that the trial court disregarded the disputed material, however there is nothing in the record in this case to show how the trial judge would know what material was disputed.

CONCLUSION

The opinion of this Court in Gardner v. State requires that this petitioner, prior to sentence of death, should have been informed of the same material which the sentencing court reviewed prior to passing sentence. The Florida Supreme Court, in a 4 to 3 decision, has misconstrued the intent of this Court, by affirming a sentence of death where the sentencing court was aware of information not made available to petitioner. The sentence of death should be vacated.

NOT FINAL UNTIL TIME EXPIRES TO FILE REHEARING PETITION, AND, IF FILED, DETERMINED.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF FLORIDA
JULY TERM, A.D. 1977

CASE NO. 44,647

Circuit Court Case No. 73-159 CF

LEARIE LEO ALFORD,
Appellant,

v.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Appellee.

Opinion filed November 10, 1977

An Appeal from the Circuit Court in and for Palm Beach County, Marvin U. Mounts, Jr., Judge

David Roth of Cone, Owen, Wagner, Nugent, Johnson & McKeown, West Palm Beach, for Appellant

Robert L. Shevin, Attorney General, Tallahassee; and Raymond L. Marky, Assistant Attorney General, Tallahassee, for Appellee

ADKINS, J.

We have for consideration a motion of Learie Leo Alford to vacate his sentence of death.

Alford's judgment and sentence were affirmed by this Court (Alford v. State, 307 So.2d 433), and the United States Supreme Court denied his petition for writ of certiorari (428 U.S. 912). In accordance with the rule of law pronounced in Gardner v. State, 45 U.S.L.W. 4275, 97 S.Ct. 1197, this Court ordered the sentencing judge to state whether he based his sentencing decision upon any information not known to Alford. The trial judge responded that he did not consider any information unknown to Alford and enclosed a letter which he wrote to the probation supervisor prior to sentencing, saying:

> "I know you have expended a great deal of time, effort and conscientious evaluation in the preparation of the pre-sentence report concerning Learie Leo Alford. I recall that you indicated to me that the revelation of the confidential section of this report to the defense would be damaging and compromising to sources who had confided in you. I respect your judgment in this.
> "I feel, however, in a case in which the jury has recommended the supreme penalty known to our law, that there well may be a constitutional right to disclosure of this confidential section to the defendant. As far as I know, there is not yet a judicial decision on what the meaning of 'factual material' in Rule 3.713(b) may be. I feel that if I cannot release the confidential section to the defendant, I should not review it myself in this particular case. I know that this means that I shall not have the benefit of a major portion of your work in this report because of this view and I regret that this is so.
> "Accordingly, do not deliver that section of your report to me."

During the course of the clemency proceeding, the Governor wrote Alford's attorney and enclosed a copy of the confidential evaluation portion of the pre-sentence investigation. The first paragraph of the confidential evaluation indicates that the sentencing judge was "made aware of some of these facts" by the supervisor.

In response to the motion to vacate, the State says that, assuming the judge was "made aware" of certain facts, that doesn't mean that he "considered" those facts in imposing the sentence. The State draws a distinction between being "aware" of certain facts and "considering" them. We agree.

The United States Supreme Court in Gardner recognized the ability of the sentencing judge to disregard material in imposing sentence when it said:

> "In those cases in which the accuracy of a report is contested, the trial judge can avoid delay by disregarding the disputed material." (Emphasis supplied.)

The judicial discretion exercised in imposing the death sentence is limited in such a manner that the judge may not consider many factors of which he is aware. As pointed out in Proffitt v. Florida, 428 U.S. 242 (1976),

> "[I]t has never suggested that jury sentencing is constitutionally required. And it would appear that judicial sentencing should lead, if anything, to even greater consistency in the imposition at the trial court level of capital punishment, since a trial judge is more experienced in sentencing than a jury, and therefore is better able to impose sentences similar to those imposed in analogous cases.
> "Under Florida's capital-sentencing procedures, in sum, trial judges are given specific and detailed guidance to assist them in deciding whether to impose a death penalty or imprisonment for life. Moreover, their decisions are reviewed to ensure that they are consistent with other sentences imposed in similar circumstances.

* * *

"The directions given to judge and jury by the Florida statute are sufficiently clear and precise to enable the various aggravating circumstances to be weighed against the mitigating ones. As a result, the trial court's sentencing discretion is guided and channeled by a system that focuses on the circumstances of each individual homicide and individual defendant in deciding whether the death penalty is to be imposed." (Emphasis supplied.)

In considering the imposition of the sentence, the trial judge's discretion is guided and channeled by statute and case law. He may be "aware" of other factors, but he does not "consider" these factors in the exercise of his discretion. For example, the judge may be "aware" of inadmissible evidence after a proffer has been made, but this evidence is never "considered" by the judge.

The record clearly shows that the trial judge complied with the requirements of Gardner and the motion to vacate is denied.

It is so ordered.

BOYD, J., Dissents with an opinion

HATCHETT, J., Dissents with an opinion with which BOYD and SUNDBERG, JJ., Concur

BOYD, J., Dissenting.

During the course of the clemency proceeding, the Governor wrote Alford's attorney and enclosed a copy of the confidential evaluation portion of the pre-sentence investigation. The first paragraph of the confidential evaluation indicates that the sentencing judge was "made aware of some of [the report's] facts" by the supervisor.

The trial court, however, has filed a copy of a letter sent to the probation supervisor prior to sentencing directing that the confidential portion of the report not be delivered to him. If, in fact, however, the sentencing judge was "made aware" by the supervisor of some of the report's undisclosed facts, constitutional standards announced in Gardner v. State, supra, require that the undisclosed facts now be presented to appellant with an opportunity to refute them before the trial judge, if he should see fit.

In criminal proceedings, it is unconstitutional for courts to receive testimony concerning guilt without affording the accused an opportunity to know, confront and cross-examine the witnesses appearing against him. In my opinion, it is likewise unconstitutional for courts to impose sentences upon persons convicted of crime without affording the accused persons an opportunity to refute any information known to the sentencing judge. Without providing such protection, incorrect representations, perhaps made in good faith, could be used by the court to give punishment more severe than would otherwise be imposed.

Such protection is more important in capital cases, where the defendant's life is at stake, than in any other kind of case.

It is my opinion that prior to making a final determination in this cause, it should be remanded to the trial court with directions that, if any portion of the confidential record was made known to the judge, it be presented to the appellant with an opportunity to refute those statements. If, indeed, the judge did not know of information undisclosed to the defense, he should so advise this Court before the Court makes a final determination of this cause.

HATCHETT, J., dissenting.

I dissent from the majority opinion which denies Alford's motion to vacate his death sentence on the grounds that the trial court was made aware of facts during the sentencing phase of the trial proceedings which were not disclosed to defense counsel. The majority attempts to create a distinction between the trial court's "considering" this confidential information and his merely being "aware" of these facts. Allowing such a distinction to be made by the trial court violates the rationale in Gardner v. Florida, 97 S.Ct. 1197 (1977) by violating the defendant's due process right to be given notice of and an opportunity to challenge any facts presented to the trial court relevant to its sentencing determination.

The majority has construed Gardner as recognizing "the ability of the sentencing judge to disregard material in imposing a sentence." This construction is based upon the statement that:

> In those cases in which the accuracy of a report is contested, the trial judge can avoid delay by disregarding the disputed material. Gardner v. Florida, supra, at 1205.

However, I believe a reading of the entire paragraph from which that quotation is excised,* makes it clear that the Court in Gardner meant a trial court can disregard material only if it has been presented to the defendant for examination, and only after the defendant has been provided an opportunity to contest the accuracy of any facts. If the contested material is of critical importance, then the trial court may not merely disregard it, but rather must make a full inquiry and resolve the dispute.

Although the confidentiality of sources is an important state interest, it is clearly outweighed by the due process rights of a defendant sentenced to death.

BOYD and SUNDBERG, JJ., Concur.

*The State also suggests that full disclosure of the presentence report will unnecessarily delay the proceeding. We think the likelihood of significant delay is overstated because we must presume that reports prepared by professional probation officers, as the Florida procedure requires, are generally reliable. In those cases in which the accuracy of a report is contested, the trial judge can avoid delay by disregarding the disputed material. Or if the disputed matter is of critical importance, the time invested in ascertaining the truth would surely be well spent if it makes the difference between life and death. (Footnotes omitted) Gardner v. LEARIE LEO ALFORD,

STATE OF FLORIDA,

MOTION TO VACATE DEATH SENTENCE

COMES NOW the Appellant, LEARIE LEO ALFORD, by and through his undersigned attorneys, and pursuant to this Honorable Court's Order of May 6, 1977, and respectfully urges the Court to set aside the death sentence herein.

As grounds therefor, Appellant would respectfully show as follows:

1. On June 8, 1977, his attorney received a letter from the Office of the Honorable Reubin O'D. Askew, Governor of the State of Florida, enclosing therein a copy of the confidential evaluation portion of the presentence investigation ordered by the Honorable Marvin U. Mounts, Jr., the presiding Circuit Judge in the trial of this cause. A copy of the letter and the enclosure is attached hereto and incorporated herein by reference as Appellant's "Exhibit A".

2. The confidential evaluation dated September 17, 1973, affirmatively contradicts the response to the Order of the Supreme Court submitted by the Honorable Marvin U. Mounts, Jr. on May 10, 1977. Specifically, the first paragraph of the confidential evaluation indicates that the aforementioned Circuit Judge was made aware of certain facts during his discussion with the Parole and Probation Officer. These facts could not be, and were not, denied or explained by the Appellant as he was unaware of the discussion between the Probation Supervisor and the Trial Judge.

3. Appellant was denied due process of law when the death penalty herein was imposed where he had no opportunity to deny or explain the aforementioned facts.

See Garner v. Florida, 45 U.S.L.W. 4275 (March 22, 1977).

WHEREFORE, Appellant respectfully requests that the Court issue an immediate stay of sentence herein, pending a fully evidentiary hearing with respect to the aforementioned allegations. Further, pursuant to this Court's Order of May 6, 1977, it is requested that the attached Exhibit "A" be sealed in order to maintain the confidentiality of the material therein.

CASE NO. 44,647

Circuit Court in and for Palm Beach County 73-159CF

LEARIE LEO ALFORD,
Appellant,

vs.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Appellee.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Gardner v. Florida, 45 U.S.L.W. 4275 (March 22, 1977), ruled that it is a denial of due process for the death sentence to be imposed when the trial judge, in weighing the aggravating and mitigating circumstances of the case, considers information which the appellant had no opportunity to deny or explain. To avoid multiple legal proceedings in various courts concerning this rule of law, and to provide a uniform procedure for the hearing of applications for relief filed in reliance on Gardner, the following procedure for the above completed death case is ordered:

1. The trial judge who imposed the death sentence in the listed case is directed to file a response with this Court within twenty days stating whether he imposed the death sentence in the identified cause on the basis of consideration of any information not known to appellant, whether it be a presentence investigation, juvenile case file information, psychiatric reports, or otherwise. In the event no such information was used, the trial judge shall so affirmatively state in his response. In the event the death sentence was imposed on the basis of any such information not known to the appellant, the trial judge is directed to file with this Court a copy of the material containing this information. Copies of the response together with copies of any sentencing information shall be furnished to counsel for the State and counsel for the appellant. If the information is confidential, counsel for both parties shall maintain its confidentiality until otherwise ordered by this Court.

2. Application for relief pursuant to the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Gardner v. Florida, supra, for the listed case shall be filed within thirty days after the trial judge has filed his response with this Court pursuant to this order.

The procedure is adopted for the sole purpose of properly implementing the Gardner decision and to avoid multiple actions in various courts.

DEPOSITION OF JOEL PADGETT

(Pages 7-11)

[7] Q. Did you, during the course of your conversations with Judge Mounts, relate to him any facts that are set forth in the confidential evaluation? A. To the best of my recollection, I don't know how many facts—I don't recall the specific conversation and I only recall vaguely—like I say, there were many occasions when we talked. I do remember starting to tell him about the person in the County Jail, the confidential source of information which had been given to me and about other things being involved.

I believe it is the best of my recollection that he cut me off, at that point and said that, you know, "I don't want to know about that, due to the nature, and so forth," and that he thought that he would have to release that to the defense attorney if he knew about it, if he knew about the facts and so forth and I believe it was after that that he made the decision that he did not want to see the confidential part of that pre-sentence investigation.

Q. Do you remember specifically whether or not you advised Judge Mounts that the defendant had [8] admitted to the confidential informant that he had committed this murder? A. I can't recall specifically whether or not I told him that. I can't remember specifically how much of that information that I had gotten from the man at the jail that I told him. I very well might have, but I can't remember specifically how much I told him and how much I didn't tell him.

Q. On June 9th, 1977, did you have a conversation with me concerning your knowledge about relating the confidential facts to the Judge? A. I had a conversation with you on the telephone one day, yes; I suppose that is correct, yes.

Q. Did I send you a latter, which I am handing you now, dated June 10th, 1977, with respect to that telephone conversation? A. Yes.

Q. And did you discuss that letter with me subsequently and tell me that it was an accurate reflection of our conversation? A. Yes.

Q. Specifically, with respect to paragraph three of that letter, you indicated that you did recall some discussion about Mr. Alford's [9] involvement with prostitutes? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall relating that to the Judge, as of this date? A. I don't—I don't recall how much of the information about the prostitutes or about Emmett Simpson or about—I don't recall specifically what I informed the Judge. I believe that I informed him, but I can't remember specifically what I did and what I did not inform him.

Q. Simpson was a well known drug dealer in the community, at that time? A. Pimp.

Q. And drug dealer? A. Yes, he deals drugs too.

Q. So, you do recall discussing his alleged involvement with him and his alleged involvement with prostitutes, him being Learie Leo Alford, but you do not recall specifically what you told him in that respect; is that a fair statement? A. Yes, I'd say that that is a fair statement.

Q. Also, would it be a fair statement that you believe you advised Judge Mounts that he, Learie [10] Leo Alford, admitted the murder to the informant, but you do not recall specifically what you said, in that respect? A. No, I can't remember whether or not I told the Judge that he admitted to this informant or whatever at the jail. I can't remember how much of all that, because there was so much that the informant in the jail was telling me about Alford and about his connections with prostitutes and with all of this. I don't remember whether or not I specifically told the Judge that Alford admitted doing it.

Q. You do recall on at least several occasions relating to the Judge the general content of your conversations with Mr. Hathaway, the confidential informant, with respect to Mr. Alford's alleged activities? A. Some of it, yes. Like I say, somewhere along the time where the information was starting to get indicative of another motive or of other crimes or something like that, the Judge did not want to hear anything about that, you know, if it started getting more specific or whatever. I can't remember at what point we stopped discussing it because he didn't want to [11] hear any more.

Q. In the letter itself it indicated, and I believe you have testified that it is an accurate reflection of our conversation, that you believe you advised Judge Mounts that he admitted committing the murder to the confidential informant. Was that your belief on June 9th, 1977? A. Well, I am not sure that each word and the exact phrasing in your letter is exactly as the phone conversation. I believe in our phone conversation that I stated that I believed that I might have or that it is very possible that I did, not that I believe that I did do it. I believe that I might have done it. I can't remember specifically everything that was said.

Q. Do you recall Judge Mounts cutting you off at any particular point, such as when you advised him that Mr. Alford was allegedly involved in other murders? Is that when he cut you off and said, "I don't want to know any more about that"? A. Mr. Roth, it was somewhere along that point, to the best of my recollection, but I can't specifically remember when it was.
